Despite the fact that working as a programmer is creative, most employers drive the employee into a rigid framework in which the work turns into a tedious routine. However, I do not like this at all, that's why I responded to your proposal.

As soon as I started thinking about looking for a job, I turned to specialists with extensive work experience to find one that would allow me to develop not only my hard, but also soft skills. Everyone said that it was with you that I could open up completely and express myself 100%.

Before that, I worked hard at another educational site, where I developed a software product in html, css, php and js. I liked my job, but a lot of restrictions killed my creativity. In this way, it was dead-end. I am always focused on the result, I want it to be as close to ideal as possible. My colleagues described me as an open-minded and ambitious person.

At my previous job, I regularly had to collect feedback from users to improve the product based on consumer desires. Real reviews help make a better product, and I'm very glad that your company's policy shares these ideas.

Thank you very much for your attention. I am fully confident that my experience and attitude will allow me to join the ranks of your staff and together bring big ideas to life. You can contact me by phone or email.

Sincerely,

BATMANOV DANIIL
